Electronic reserve sources as listed in course schedule, available through RU Libraries.

Course Description:
This course will analyze the social and aesthetic functions of documentary in film, photography, journalism, biography, and the non-fiction novel. We will focus on critical questions that documentarians have pursued in their attempts to record phenomena and create cultural products about U.S. culture, society and politics. We will pay a great deal of attention to medium and form by considering the qualities and features distinct to various documentary media, including print and radio journalism, oral history, documentary film and video, web/net/electronic media, and fictionalized approaches to documenting.
Our goal is to investigate some of the key issues and questions at stake in documentary and in constructions of “America.” What does it mean to document people and/or culture? What is the role of the documentarian? What is the relationship between documentary and fiction? What are some of the ethical questions at stake in exposing private subjects to the public domain through the documentary project?

Course Policies and Requirements:
Workload:
Each member of the class will produce 4 short papers (two papers of 3-4 pages and two of 5-6 pages) addressing particular filmic and written texts included in the course materials. In addition, students will work in small groups throughout the semester to produce a documentary on a topic and in the format of their choosing (as approved by instructor). The documentary will be the culminating project for the course and is heavily weighted. Each student will receive the same grade as the members of his/her group for the final draft of the documentary. All other assignments pertaining to the project will receive individual grades based on effort, performance, analysis and presentation. The assignments leading up to the final documentary are as follows:

Proposal /Annotated Bibliography: (2-3 pages) Each student will produce a proposal for The documentary including a group project overview (which may be written as a group) and an individual statement page written by each student, including the students roles and responsibilities as a member of the production team. Each student will also produce an annotated bibliography with at least 3 sources pertaining to the group topic.

Rough Draft: length and form will depend on your group’s project

Presentation: Students will present final documentaries in groups with each student responsible for a component of the presentation.

Final Draft: The final draft of the project will be a polished, well-researched, and well-executed group documentary. Students may choose from a number of media and formats, such as radio documentary, print journalism, online blogging, documentary film/video and still photography.

Collaborative Evaluation Paper: Each student is required to keep detailed notes of all group meetings, plans, and division of duties. Notebooks should be organized by dates and entries. At the end of the semester, each student will turn in this notebook along with a 2-3 page paper evaluating the collaborative process and her/his own role in it.

Under special circumstances, students will be permitted to produce documentary projects individually. If you are interested in doing so, then you will need to consult with me very early in the semester.

In addition to our class meetings there will be six film screenings scheduled during the semester. Viewing these films is required. If you cannot attend screenings you are responsible for viewing the films on reserve at the Douglass/Music Library during the week before the screening.

Policies:
As this course meets only once a week, attendance and active participation are crucial
Any student missing more than two class meetings will not be able to pass this course

Papers are due at the beginning of class on the dates assigned. Late papers will be penalized one-half letter grade per day late.

Your work and conduct for this course must adhere to Rutgers University’s Policy on Academic Integrity for Undergraduate and Graduate Students which can be found online at: http://teachx.rutgers.edu/integrity/policy All papers and presentations must represent your own, original work, done for this course only. If you submit work that has been copied without attribution or that has been prepared by someone other than you or that in any way misrepresents somebody else’s work as your own, your work will be failed and you will face discipline by the University. It is your responsibility to know what constitutes plagiarism and how to avoid it.
